THE SENTINEL, SATURDAY MORNING, DEC. 8, 1860.

To the Public.

The Sentinel, having double the circulation of any other paper in Milwaukee, and being the only one that is published every day, it is the best medium for the publication of advertisements.

The Loss of the Jersey City—A Thrilling Story.

The article which we copy, this morning, from the Cleveland Herald, will give our readers some idea of the destruction which swept over Lake Erie, a fortnight ago today, and caused so many deaths and such a general panic, to a premature grave. The Despatch, Capt. Gross, was lost in the same dreadful gale, but no one, alive, survives to tell us the sad particulars.

Matters at Washington.

Congress was not in session, yesterday; both houses having adjourned over from Thursday to Monday. We have the usual batch of rumors from the Federal Capital. The "Secessionists" continue to be rampant; but the friends of the Union are gaining ground. The composition of the select committee of thirty-three, from the House of Representatives, on the state of the country, is very generally approved of. The Border States of the South seem to be in earnest in their efforts to check the mad career of the Southern States. Let them persevere in well-doing. They will be cheerfully backed by an undivided North. But for the last heads of South Carolina, we should entertain very confident hopes of an early and amicable settlement of the difficulties between the North and South. Even as it is, we think the prospect for the restoration of peace and harmony improves with every day's progress. Let us still hope for the best.

The Bunch of Devils.

Public appetite is being tickled just now, with the food that virtuous sauce. The public imagination is being exercised over the details of domestic sorrow. It is astonishing with what avidity the evidence is caught up and gloated over, by old and young—men, women and children. What is it—sympathy or a morbid curiosity? The press can turn an honest penny always when curiosity is excited, and the press gathers up the details and put a glowing and lurid light on the most trivial matters. The New York Courier & Enquirer remarks with much truth and feeling: "We hear no voice of compassion for the wife or the husband standing mournfully amid the fragments of their shattered household; we see no merciful hand stretched forth to draw a veil over the crimes or weaknesses which have caused the wound no one shall feel; we find no pitying sympathy, like the angels, to drop an obliterating tear on the sad record of sorrow and disgrace." Also for humanity we find none of these. As for their place a brutal, boisterous throng, as if a moral Roman amphitheater, eager to see the gladiators die the more bloodily, and to open part lives to public scorn and detestation, reputations forever. The worst features about this trial, so far, appear to be as follows:

Mr. Brown, extorted from his wife a minute confession of her guilt, which was signed by her in presence of a notary. Mr. Brown then induced her to sign away in his favor her right to dower in his real estate—amounting to $166,000. Having thus, as an injured husband, saved over his wounded honor, and comfortably provided for his future temporal welfare—being, moreover, satisfied of the legitimacy of his child, whose custody he retained—why could not the unfortunate woman be permitted to retire quietly to her friends, without so terrible a scandal and disgrace? The unhappy lady, unfortunately as it is for the parties interested, afterwards another solemn warning, which may not, we hope, be utterly lost upon society. It warns us in accounts trumpet-tongued, against the misery and despair which all but certain to follow marriages of convenience. The guardian of this lady assured her that her suit was an excellent matter; that he was "warranted to become a rich man." Exposed by her confession to the knowledge of the State's attorney, which was deprecate; that while the gloomy story is carried far and wide upon the winds, the lessons it teaches shall not be disregarded; and may the seed not fall upon stony ground.

The Message at Washington.

The correspondence of the Cincinnati Commercial, writes, as follows, in regard to the impression made by Mr. Buchanan's last, at Washington: "No message ever fell more still-born than the last production of the President. It satisfies no one. It first puts one leg over the fence and then pulls it back. It then tries the other leg with the same result, and is finally left astraddle of the rail, with its legs touching ground on neither side. It looks as though Buchanan would be his solitary champion in the world, without his friends outside, but without single enemies, as attempting to explain away the inconsistency of his message."

Newspaper Changes.

The Horicon Argus is about to be moved to Beaver Dam, and we are informed that our friend Palmer, of the Burlington Gazette, will shortly start a new ad, we are sure, a good paper in that town. We hope the Horicon people will "see him through" by deserting it.

The Scientific American.

The Scientific American proposes the introduction of half sheets of paper, in the outside of most letters and notes is useless and wasted. A stamp might be put in the center of the sheet at the top instead of the corner as is now done.

Severe Court of Minnesota.

The Supreme Court of Minnesota met at the capitol on the 3d. The "Three Rites" on the capitol law, which Judge Nelson pronounced unconstitutional will be reversed and finally determined.

Monument to Jim Crow.

The Negro Minstrels in New York are preparing a grand concert to raise a fund for a monument to mark the grave of Jim Crow, who was killed by a steam locomotive.
